HOUSTON, TEXAS, JANUARY 23, 2012 – FotoFest announces the Russian artists and exhibitions for its 2012 Biennial Contemporary Russian Photography, which opens in Houston, Texas, on March 16, 2012 and will be on view through April 29, 2012. The Biennial explores modern and contemporary Russian photographic history over the last five decades, from the post-Stalinist period of the 1950s to the present day. Three main exhibitions, created for the FotoFest 2012 Biennial, present three periods of Russian modern and contemporary photography, with the works of 142 artists from Russia, Belarus and the Ukraine: After Stalin, “The Thaw”, The Re-emergence of the Personal Voice (1950s-1970s), Perestroika, Liberalization and Experimentation (1980s-2010), and The Young Generation (2009-2012). Of the works, on loan from private collections and the archives of the artists themselves, many are being shown for the first time outside of Russia.

With a population of 143 million people, Russia spans two continents and nine time zones, while its citizens speak 28 languages. It is a global powerhouse fitfully engaged with capitalism, consumerism and an ongoing struggle to define itself as a modern nation in the context of its own history and culture. FotoFest’s 2012 Biennial will serve to introduce an international audience to never- or little-before-seen contemporary Russian art practice and culture through the medium of photography.

The FotoFest 2012 Biennial is the Fourteenth International Biennial of Photography and Photo-related Art, and it is the United States’ first and longest-running international photographic art event. Event and visitor information is available on the Fotofest website at www.fotofest.org/2012biennial.

The Biennial Catalogue, co-published with Schilt Publishing in Amsterdam, will present the full range of the Russian exhibitions as well as 50 independent exhibitions presented by Houston's leading art museums, galleries, non-profit and corporate art spaces. A Biennial Map and Calendar, with information on all Biennial programs and locations, will be available at over 100 sites across Houston and online in late February 2012.

FOTOFEST 2012 BIENNIAL EXHIBITIONS – CONTEMPORARY RUSSIAN PHOTOGRAPHY

The three main FotoFest 2012 Biennial exhibitions feature 800 historic and contemporary works including classical photography, video and mixed-media installations. These exhibitions look at the evolution of creative photographic art in Russia from the beginning of “The Thaw” through the late 1970s, the early and late periods of Perestroika reforms (late 1980s to 2010), to the current period (2009-2011). These exhibitions are accompanied by a special exhibition of Soviet photojournalists who were winners of World Press Photo Awards from 1950-1991.

An international team of curators from Russia and the United States has organized the main Biennial exhibitions. The Russian curators are Evgeny Berezner, head of the “In Support of Photography in Russia” Project, The Iris Foundation, Moscow; Irina Chmyreva, Senior Researcher at the Russian Academy of Fine Arts; and Natalia Tarasova, a writer and cultural affairs consultant for the “In Support of Photography in Russia” Project. Leading figures in Russian photography and culture, Mr. Berezner, Dr. Chmyreva and Ms. Tarasova have organized more than 200 exhibitions with Russian artists over the past 15 years. The Russian curators are joined by Wendy Watriss, Senior Curator and Artistic Director of FotoFest.

“These exhibitions tracing the re-emergence and history of independent art photography in Russian photography will challenge expectations and open the door to surprising encounters with Russian photographic art,” says Fred Baldwin, FotoFest Chairman and Co-founder. “They bring visibility to personalities and creative directions in Russian visual art that have been largely invisible to the outside world in recent decades.”

After Stalin, “The Thaw”, The Re-emergence of the Personal Voice - The late 1950s-1970s

FotoFest at Williams Tower Gallery, 2800 Post Oak, Houston, Texas

With Joseph Stalin's death in 1953 and the rise to power of Nikita Khrushchev, the Soviet government opened a period of episodic reforms that became known as “The Thaw.” Between alternating years of openness and years of constriction, artists managed to find independent avenues for self-expression. In twenty-five years of complex shifts in the political, cultural and economic life of the Soviet Union, there was space for the development of a personal voice, even in one of the most closely supervised areas of Soviet culture – photography.

These reforms created the possibility of closer contact with non-Communist nations, including the United States, which presented two important and wildly popular U.S.-organized art exhibitions in Moscow in 1959 – Edward Steichen's Family of Man and the American National Exhibition.

Many of the works in this section of the Russian exhibitions are vintage photographic prints on loan from private collectors Natalia Grigorieva and Edward Litvinsky, founders and owners of the Lumiere Brothers Center for Photography in Moscow, founded in conjunction with one of the first private galleries in Russia devoted to fine art photography.

Other works come from members of Novator, one of the most important and enduring of the independent Russian photography associations, founded in the early 1960s by individual photographers and photography lovers in Russia. More than photo clubs, the intent of these associations was to open a space where photographers could present and discuss new ideas in photography, and re-visit the unofficial, often banned, works of Russian-Soviet photography of the previous three decades. Members of these associations shared historical and contemporary works not approved by the state.

Perestroika, Liberalization and Experimentation - The mid/late 1980s-2010

FotoFest at Winter Street Studios, 2101 Winter St., and Spring St. Studios, 1824 Spring St, Houston, Texas

The mid/late 1980s and the 1990s were a period of profound transition for the Soviet Union. The well-known reform movements Glasnost (openness) and Perestroika (economic restructuring) changed the country irrevocably and ultimately set the stage for the dissolution of the Soviet Union. These movements vastly expanded the cultural openings of the previous decades. The 1980s and 1990s brought about the dissolution of state censorship and extraordinary opportunities were created for an open examination of Soviet and Russian society. The 1990s were a decade of unregulated capitalist growth that created a class of newly affluent business people and consumers of mass culture.

Photography and other art forms saw a burst of creative energy and multi-faceted experimentalism that moved in many different directions. The first years of Perestroika were marked by hope. Artists not only re-interpreted all aspects of Soviet political language and life, but they also often moved art into non-traditional spaces, bringing it directly to the public. Later, with the ensuing political and economic chaos of the mid 1990s, artists became more openly critical, confronting traditional Soviet mores and parodying the external realities of Soviet-Russian life and ideology. In the early 21st century, as the heady and often violent conditions of change began to stabilize, many artists turned toward aesthetic and metaphysical explorations of photography itself. It was a twenty-five year period of remarkable diversity and creativity in Russian photography.

The Young Generation - 2007-2012

FotoFest Headquarters at Vine Street Studios, 1113 Vine Street, Houston, Texas

Unlike their predecessors, the young generation of Russian artists today has little direct experience with Soviet Communism. Growing up after its collapse, they began their careers as part of a globally-connected, consumerist and individual-oriented society. Although some have the means to leave Russia to study art in Western Europe and the U.S., many others continue to work inside Russia. In contrast to the sharply ironic and outward-looking artists of the Perestroika periods, younger artists are looking inward, immersed in their own personal experiences and the psychological dilemmas of growing up in modern-day Russia. The artists in The Young Generation exhibit are:

Tatiana Antonuk
Oleg Borodin
Roman Bregman
Alexandra Demenkova
Kir Esadov
Maria Kozhanova

ORGANIZERS - RUSSIA

FotoFest 2012 Biennial - Russia is being organized by FotoFest in partnership with three Russian curators: Evgeny Berezner, Irina Chmyreva and Natalia Tarasova. Mr. Berezner, head of the "In Support of Photography in Russia" Project of The Iris Art Foundation, Moscow and Dr. Chmyreva, Senior Researcher at the Russian Academy of Fine Arts, have written extensively on Russian photography. Ms. Tarasova is a long time collaborator. Together, the team has curated and presented over 200 exhibitions of historical and contemporary Russian artists. As a precursor to the 2012 FotoFest Biennial, FotoFest initiated Russia's first international portfolio review in September 2011, co-sponsored and hosted by the Garage Center for Contemporary Culture, the Iris Art Foundation, founded by Daria Zhukova in 2008, and Russian Information Agency RIA Novosti.

FotoFest, along with its Russian colleagues, have organized exchanges and exhibitions of Russian artists and art work for well over a decade. In 2002, FotoFest presented an exhibition of historic Russian Pictorialist photographers from the early 20th Century as part of its 2002 Biennial. Two years later, FotoFest sent artists and four exhibitions, including the well-known 911 memorial exhibition Here is NY, to Moscow and the city of Samara, and several Russian artists, including the art collective AES+F were featured at the FotoFest 2006 Biennial.

FotoFest 2012 Biennial Contemporary Russian Photography exhibitions begin March 16 in four places and continue through April 29, 2012 with programming for the public occurring every week. The full program is available online at www.fotofest.org/2012biennial.
